Together Everyone Achieves More [TEAM]

Chief Mechanical and Electrical Engineer-I Mr. Shakeel Ahmed Khan honored the services of his team of professionals by giving recognition under the tag of “Aytraaf –e- Kamal”. The team work of the Mechanical and Electrical Engineering-I department is not proven for the first time, it’s being practiced in the spirit of Together Everyone Achieves More (TEAM) since the organization is in existence. The need of time is to give recognition to the individuals working and add pride to their respective Teams. Raghibul Khair (General Manager Planning and Development) and Mr. Niaz Ali Jessar (General Manager Administration).

The anchor lost at sea of BD-AFTAB was not a good sign for the working of dredger as its core operation dependency lies on these anchors, but the harbor geographical knowledge, experience of our workers and the skill they acquired over the period of time had no match, and add value to team BD-AFTAB in retrieval of its lost anchor. The specialized job of SRP system replacement in-house not only save valuable foreign exchange but also add valuable experience to the portfolio of Mechanical and Electrical Engineering team involve in performing this task. As the floating crane Hathi is of above 50 years of age the skilled required for the replacement of articulated joints is of high occupational risk and numerous hazards were involved in materializing this task but the team of structure shop Manora under the supervision of his command accepted the challenge and with the limited resources available had materialized the job of replacement of these articulated joints.

All the efforts put for giving recognition to the teams of professional doesn’t end here but it is the beginning of time for accepting new tasks and prove themselves for the upcoming challenges of modern and dynamics of marine industry.

Personal Contribution

Simple Way to Live

Life is not a bed of Roses, One has to cope with many unwanted things, thoughts, situations, and of course to face people who plays either positive or negative roles and ultimately effects one's life. But the problem is not controlling them or the situation. There are two aspects in any problem, either controllable or uncontrollable. If the situation is controllable then take the measures not to effect the mind and body. If it's not in your control, I would simply say "Let it Go".

It is our strength of the mind which plays a stoic or non-stoic behavior, and here is the ultimate power of human being that lies in it. If you can control the mind, rather than mind controlling your body then you have achieved, what I can refer to as "Knowing yourself". I would explain it by giving an example in order to grasp and move to the root cause of every problem i.e. the reaction to any particular situation:-

In the morning when there arises a situation, your baby threw tea on your clothes and without thinking you started shouting, scolding the kid, yelling on wife and went without breakfast to office. Due to your bad mood, your day at office is for sure to be ruined. If you are an officer then the employee will have to be on toes and stress will prevail throughout the day and more importantly, nothing productive will come out and even the health deteriorates due to prolong and continuous bad mood.

Now take the same situation with different approach, the tea was dropped by the kid on your cloths but you said "baby you must take care and no problem, have your breakfast". You go and change your trouser and do the breakfast and drop the kid to the school happily and then go your office in nice mood and then you be able to handle everything nicely. This reaction to the same situation yields different result. So one must work out on the approach and train the mind in order to analyze a situation and then react. The reaction should be ethical, logical and most importantly valuable in terms of relationships and emotions which definitely affect the body.

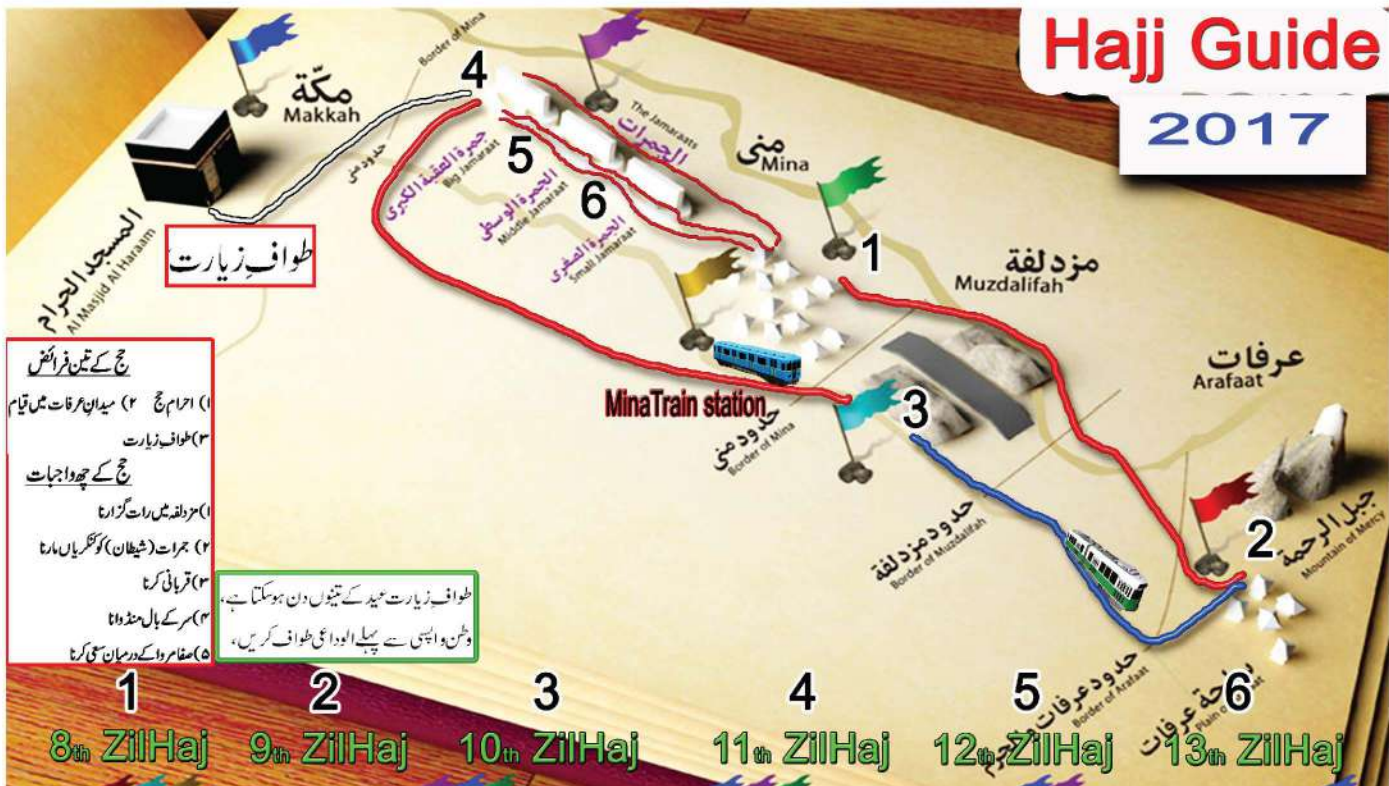

In short, one must control the emotions rather than being controlled by them. Keep smiling and keep enjoying with a happy face every day in order to keep the doctor away.
